Re: Ensuring a Right to Counsel for Children and Parents in CAPTA Reauthorization

Dear Congressional Leaders:

The undersigned organizations, representing a wide range of advocates and stakeholders for children and families throughout the country, submit this letter in strong support of the proposal in S.1927 to guarantee legal counsel for children and parents involved in child welfare court proceedings. We write to urge the House Committee to incorporate similar language into the final bill, incorporating recommended revisions which will better complement existing state law and facilitate broader community support. These revisions are supported by the American Bar Association's Center on Children and the Law, the Children's Advocacy Institute, the National Association of Counsel for Children, Children's Law Center of California and other state partners.

All parties in child welfare court proceedings deserve effective legal representation to zealously advocate for their needs, to navigate the complex labyrinth of executive and judicial branch processes, and to amplify their voice as courts make life-altering decisions. With such fundamental rights at stake, access to legal representation at every stage of the proceedings is imperative. These are complex matters - often implicating numerous federal and state laws, expert testimony from clinicians, and the intersection of education, medical, and mental health systems. Attorneys are uniquely qualified to provide legal advice, file motions and appeals, call and cross-examine witnesses, and harness the full panoply of legal protections available under state and federal law.

A growing body of research demonstrates the value of high-quality legal representation for children and parents. The federal government's six-year QIC-ChildRep study found children were 40% more likely to leave foster care within their first six months when the child's attorney was specially trained.¹ Likewise, numerous studies demonstrate that guaranteeing counsel for parents yields more successful family reunifications, a shorter time to adoption or guardianship when reunification is not possible, and overall cost savings.² The U.S. Children's Bureau has affirmed that “[p]roviding high quality legal representation to all parties at all stages of dependency proceedings is crucial to realizing...basic tenets of fairness and due process under the law.”³

While volunteer Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASAs) provide a service to the court, they are not substitutes for licensed legal representation for the child. Displaced from home, school, and important relationships, children are profoundly impacted by judicial decisions, yet face the greatest barriers communicating their requests to the court. When a child has a medical problem, they need a doctor; when a child has a legal problem, they need a lawyer. Individuals with lived experience in the child welfare system have affirmed that high-quality legal representation is a priority strategy for reform.

The timing for this change is ripe. Nearly half of all states are accessing newly available federal matching funds through Title IV-E for legal representation of children and parents in child welfare cases. The U.S. Children’s Bureau has issued helpful guidance to help states leverage this resource. The advocacy, non-profit and philanthropic communities are aligned behind a common vision of high-quality legal representation for all parties in child welfare proceedings. In short, the field is primed to ensure the success of this revision.

Thank you for your commitment to justice for children and parents in the CAPTA reauthorization process. It is paramount for all parties to have the benefit of legal counsel if we are ever to build a child welfare system that lives up to its call.

Sincerely,
